What Happiness Means To Me

My view of happiness, what it is and what it means has changed a lot over the course of my relatively short life. I like to say I believe there's a major difference between being happy and what happiness means to me. Many different things make me feel the short-lived emotion of happiness. For instance a stranger smiling at me, getting the last parking spot, or someone simply holding the door open for me brings me joy. These little things along with many others that happen throughout a day make me happy, but when I think of my happiness, to me it more closely represents how happy I am in my life currently.

When I got to college I took it as a clean slate and really tried to find myself. Given all that independence you're finally able to focus on yourself without any outside influences. I decided I wanted and be as happy as I could be in this new place and tried doing things differently to achieve that feeling. One of the things I did was stop using other people's happiness as a gauge for how happy I should be in my own life. Everyone has role models and in my case mine is my dad. I use to
